

South Sudan's response to plan of action toward destruction of its stockpiled is firmed.I had explained this in the morning session that at the 12th. MSP, South Sudan reported a number of stockpiled of anti personal mines discovered in former military camps of the Sudanese armed forces.The number of mines in question was quite small quantity. While this quantity is small, the challenge of destruction is not so straight- forward. However, the mines in question are a small part of a larger weapons cache that was discovered, which will need to be destroyed in its totality as soon as we get the funding and all necessary arrangements are completed.South Sudan does not have any other known stockpile.South Sudan is committed to determining the status of the destruction of these weapons storage and to keep the States parties informed in manner consistent with action 22 of the Cartagena action plan.Thank you
