ORGANIZATION AND WORK OF THE FIRST MEETING

A. Introduction

1. The Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction provides in Article 11, paragraphs 1 and 2:

“1. The States Parties shall meet regularly in order to consider any matter with regard to the application or implementation of this Convention, including:

“(a) The operation and status of this Convention;

“(b) Matters arising from the reports submitted under the provisions of this Convention;

“(c) International cooperation and assistance in accordance with Article 6;

“(d) The development of technologies to clear anti-personnel mines;

“(e) Submissions of States Parties under Article 8; and

“(f) Decisions relating to submissions of States Parties as provided for in Article 5.

“2. The First Meeting of the States Parties shall be convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations within one year after the entry into force of this Convention. The subsequent meetings shall be convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations annually until the First Review Conference.”

2. At its fifty-third session, the General Assembly of the United Nations in resolution 53/77 N welcomed the generous offer by the Government of the Republic of Mozambique to act as host for the First Meeting of the States Parties, and requested the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 11, paragraph 2, of the Convention, to undertake the preparations necessary to convene the First Meeting of the States Parties, to take place in Maputo during the week of 3 May 1999.

3. To prepare for the First Meeting, States Parties convened two rounds of open-ended informal consultations at the Palais des Nations, Geneva, to which they also invited States not parties to the Convention, as well as the United Nations, other relevant international organizations or institutions, regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations.

4. The first round of informal consultations was held on 1 March 1999, the day the Convention entered into force. During the consultations, participants considered a number of issues relating to the organization of the First Meeting including papers containing a draft provisional agenda, a draft programme of work, draft rules of procedure, and provisional estimated costs for convening the First Meeting. No objections were raised in connection with any of the papers considered and it was agreed that they would be finalized in all six languages of the Convention to be put before the First Meeting.

5. The second set of informal consultations took place on 13 April 1999. At that meeting, participants reviewed elements for a proposed draft political declaration to be issued on the occasion of the First Meeting; possible modalities for intersessional work under the Convention; practical ways of circulating the reports to be submitted under Article 7 of the Convention; and the issue of the venue and format of future meetings of the States Parties.

That Paper is contained in annex III to this report.

25. PART II

MAPUTO DECLARATION

Maputo, Mozambique

7 May, 1999

1. We, the States Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, together with signatory States, are gathered in Maputo, Mozambique, joined by international organizations and institutions and non-governmental organizations, to reaffirm our unwavering commitment to the total eradication of an insidious instrument of war and terror: anti-personnel mines.
2. Even now, at the end of the century, anti-personnel mines continue to maim and kill countless innocent people each day; force families to flee their lands and children to abandon their schools and playgrounds; and prevent long-suffering refugees and displaced persons from returning to rebuild their homes and their lives. The real or suspected presence of anti-personnel mines continues to deny access to much-needed resources and services and cripples normal social and economic development.
3. We raise our serious concern at the continued use of anti-personnel mines in areas of instability around the world. Such acts are contrary to the aims of the Convention; they exacerbate tensions, undermine confidence and impede diplomatic efforts to find peaceful solutions to conflicts.
4. Therefore, even as we celebrate this First Meeting of the States Parties two months after the rapid entry-into-force of the Convention, we recognize that the enduring value of this unique international instrument rests in fully realizing the obligations and the promise contained within the Convention
 - to ensure no new use;
 - to eradicate stocks;
 - to cease development, production and transfers;
 - to clear mined areas and thus free the land from its deadly bondage;
 - to assist the victims to reclaim their lives and to prevent new victims.
5. We believe these to be common tasks for humanity and therefore call on governments and people everywhere to join us in this effort.
6. To those who continue to use, develop, produce, otherwise acquire, stockpile, retain and transfer these weapons: cease now, and join us in this task.

7. To those who can offer technical and financial assistance to meet the enormous challenges of humanitarian mine action: intensify your efforts and help build the capacity of mine-affected countries themselves to increasingly take on these tasks.
8. To those who can offer assistance: help with the physical and psycho-social treatment and social and economic reintegration of mine victims, support mine awareness education programmes, and help those States in need to meet treaty obligations to demine and to destroy stockpiles, thus facilitating the widest possible adherence to the Convention.
9. To those that have not yet joined this community of States Parties: accede quickly to the Convention. To those who have signed: ratify. If ratification will take more time: provisionally apply the terms of the Convention while you put in place the necessary domestic legislation.
10. To the international community: promulgate, implement and universalize the Convention, the new international standard and norm of behaviour it is establishing.
11. In this spirit, we voice our outrage at the unabated use of anti-personnel mines in conflicts around the world. To those few signatories who continue to use these weapons, this is a violation of the object and purpose of the Convention that you solemnly signed. We call upon you to respect and implement your commitments.
12. Know that, as a community dedicated to seeing an end to the use of anti-personnel mines, our assistance and cooperation will flow primarily to those who have foresworn the use of these weapons forever through adherence to and implementation of the Convention.
13. Driven by the sad reality that the people of the world will continue to suffer the consequences of the use of anti-personnel mines for many years to come, we believe it crucial that we use this First Meeting of the States Parties to ensure that we make continued, measurable progress in our future efforts to eradicate anti-personnel mines and to alleviate the humanitarian crisis caused by them.
14. We recognize that anti-personnel mines represent a major public health threat. The plight of mine victims has revealed the inadequacy of assistance for victims in the countries most affected. Such assistance must be integrated into broader public health and socio-economic strategies to ensure not simply short-term care for victims, but special attention to the serious long-term needs for social and economic reintegration. Mine victims must be permitted to realize, with dignity, their place within their families and their societies. These issues must be accorded the highest political importance and practical commitment by States Parties and all those in the international community who care about this issue.
15. To this end, we commit ourselves to mobilise resources and energies to universalize the Convention, alleviate and eventually eradicate the human suffering caused by anti-personnel mines, including by striving to meet the goal of "zero victims".

16. For these purposes, we, the States Parties, will implement an intersessional work programme to take us steadily forward to the next Meeting of the States Parties, which will take place in Geneva from 11 to 15 September 2000. This will enable us to focus and advance our mine action efforts and to measure progress made in achieving our objectives. This work will be based on our tradition of inclusivity, partnership, dialogue, openness and practical cooperation. In this regard, we invite all interested governments, international organizations and institutions and non-governmental organizations to join us in this task.

17. Our work programme will draw together experts, building on the discussions held here in Maputo, to address the key thematic issues of:

- the general status and operation of the Convention;
- mine clearance;
- victim assistance and mine awareness;
- stockpile destruction; and,
- technologies for mine action.

This intersessional work will, inter alia, assist us in developing, with the United Nations, a global picture of priorities consistent with the obligations and time-frames contained within the Convention, including with regard to international cooperation and assistance. It will also take into account important work done at the international, regional and sub-regional levels.

18. The work of our experts will begin just four months from now, in Geneva. We appreciate and accept the offer of the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining to support our efforts. Our work will complement and reinforce the important mine action activities being undertaken by mine-affected States working in partnership with other States, international and regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector--also recognizing the United Nations system as an important actor in global mine action efforts.

19. Meeting here in one of the most mine-affected continents on earth and in a country which has experienced the ravages wreaked by these weapons on the Mozambican people and the social fabric of the nation, we focus our minds and strengthen our conviction on the need to make the killing fields of anti-personnel mines that have terrorized, maimed and killed people, destroyed lives and hope for too long, a relic of the past.

We are determined to succeed in our common task.

We are determined to work in partnership to this end.

We are determined to apply the principle of international humanitarian law, enunciated in the final preambular paragraph of the Convention itself that "...the right of the parties to an armed conflict to choose methods or means of warfare is not unlimited..."

This is our firm pledge to future generations.

ANNEX III

CIRCULATION OF ARTICLE 7 REPORTS

Under Article 7, paragraph 1, of the Convention each State Party shall report to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on items (a) to (i). To facilitate this undertaking and to promote comparability and evaluation of data, a standard format has been developed in consultation with States Parties and will be considered for adoption by the First Meeting of the States Parties.

Given the detailed character of the reporting obligations, and the requirement under Article 7 for the Secretary-General of the United Nations to circulate this information, consideration should be given to the practical modalities and implications of meeting this requirement and an efficient and cost-effective approach to meeting this requirement should be established.

In accordance with Article 14, paragraph 2, of the Convention the costs incurred by the Secretary-General of the United Nations under Article 7 shall be borne by the States Parties. The amount of those costs depends largely on two factors:

- circulation of printed documents
- translation into all six authentic languages

Is there a need for printed documents?

With a new treaty instrument and new reporting requirements, we have an opportunity to take a new approach to the issue of document circulation. That means we could take advantage of today's prevalence of paperless communication and reflect this in the way the Article 7 reports are circulated.

States Parties would mail or submit their reports to the United Nations Secretariat through normal channels. The provision of reporting information on a disk would allow the Secretariat to set up the required compilation of reports in their internal database with a minimum of effort - and costs for the States Parties. For that reason the provision of reporting information on a disk should be encouraged.

For that reason and in order to assist States Parties in using the formats, Austria as Friend of the Chair would plan to distribute to delegations the agreed format, in template form, on disk, subsequent to its adoption by States Parties.

However, the United Nations Secretariat would continue to be prepared to receive also 'hard copy' reports in cases where States Parties will not be in a position to use electronic communication means, or when information would be submitted which is not easily convertible, e.g. maps.

Under Article 7, paragraph 3, of the Convention the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit all such reports to the States Parties. Given the anticipated quantity of information to be submitted, it would be practical and cost-effective to enable States Parties to retrieve the required information electronically – directly from the database in the United Nations Secretariat. Of course, those countries that might require or prefer a paper version could request the United Nations Secretariat for a 'hard copy' printout of this information.

Should only States Parties have access to information provided under Article 7?

The information contained in the reports will be of direct relevance for mine action. For this reason, it would indeed make sense to make it available to all interested in mine action - governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Easy access to Article 7 reports would improve the information flow and hence the coordination and effectiveness of global mine-clearance. Indeed, it would run counter to the humanitarian purpose of the Convention to prevent non-States and NGOs from having access to what will be current and accurate information which could be used for mine action purposes.

Some countries that are not yet States Parties have indicated that they would be willing to report under Article 7 on a voluntary basis. Should those countries be excluded from retrieving the reports of other States?

It should be recalled that the reports for the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms are on the web-site of the United Nations, freely accessible for everyone using the internet. The weapons systems covered under the Register of Conventional Arms are generally accepted to be of continued military significance and thus the information could be considered to be of a more sensitive nature than the contents of the Article 7 reports that deal with a weapon the destruction of which is at the core of the treaty obligations. Further, as States Parties will have already given up the option of using anti-personnel mines, questions of national security and confidentiality of information for these purposes become largely irrelevant.

Has every report to be translated into all six authentic languages?

States Parties will provide their reports in the language of their choice among the authentic languages of the Convention. These reports will be entered into the United Nations database in this form.

Attached to the principle of multilingualism, States Parties will aim at making these reports also available in other authentic languages of the Convention.

In view of the fact that the Convention does not provide for the costs of such translations, States Parties will adopt a pragmatic, case-by-case approach, calling on interested States Parties to provide such translations which then could be transmitted by the reporting State Party to the United Nations Secretariat for inclusion in the United Nations database.

This mechanism will be assessed at the next Meeting of the States Parties.

ANNEX IV

INTERSESSIONAL WORK

Background

Over the past three years a number of meetings on various aspects of Mine Action have been organized. They have provided important discussions on how to improve international coordination. However, there has been a certain lack of systematic structuring and sequencing of agendas and conferences. A more comprehensive framework would facilitate further progress.

Since its entry into force, the Convention may provide a more coherent and focused framework for international cooperation also with regard to Mine Action activities. It will be important to ensure the systematic, effective implementation of the Convention through a more regularized programme of work by establishing informal, open-ended intersessional working groups which could engage a broad international community for the purpose of advancing the achievement of the humanitarian objectives of the Convention. Such groups could facilitate in-depth considerations of Mine Action issues by all interested parties at meetings which complement and build upon each other in a structured and systematic way.

Proposal

To consolidate and concentrate global Mine Action efforts to the greatest extent possible and to highlight the role of the Convention as a comprehensive framework for Mine Action, it is proposed that the First Meeting of the States Parties in Maputo consider the establishment of an intersessional work programme. The aim is to organize the work within the framework of the Convention in a way which promotes continuity, openness, transparency, inclusiveness and a cooperative spirit.

In this regard, using the Maputo Declaration, the States Parties could establish informal, open-ended Standing Committees of Experts (SCEs) to focus on key themes as:

- Mine clearance
- Victim assistance, socio-economic reintegration and mine awareness
- Stockpile destruction
- Technologies for mine action
- General status and operation of the Convention

Mandate of the SCEs

- ▶ In-depth consideration of relevant questions for improving Mine Action within the above categories and outlining specific activities.
- ▶ Facilitating and supporting the effective functioning of the Convention as an instrument of Mine Action by maintaining practical work at a high level and with particular emphasis on international cooperation among governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The role of the Intersessional Work Programme undertaken by the SCEs should be an essential element in maintaining the momentum and cohesion behind the global humanitarian Mine Action effort. The work of the SCEs should support, inter alia, the coordination role played by the United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) as the focal point for United Nations Mine Action, and encourage the active participation of the United Nations and regional organizations active in Mine Action.

Participation

The work of the SCEs should build on the approach and spirit of inclusivity and engagement present in the informal Ottawa process, the Oslo negotiations and the First Meeting of the States Parties in Maputo. SCEs should provide an informal setting in which experts representing all interested Mine Action actors, e.g. States Parties to the Convention, Signatory States, other interested States, international and regional organizations and NGOs, might have an opportunity for substantive discussion and work to ensure that the global community continues to improve and make more efficient its collective Mine Action efforts in support of the objectives of the Convention.

Organizational Modalities for Intersessional Work

The SCEs should be co-chaired by a mine-affected and another interested State Party. The Co-chairs should be assisted in carrying out their tasks by two Rapporteurs, also reflecting this same balanced approach: one from a mine-affected and the other from another interested State Party. The Rapporteurs will assume the role of Co-chairs for the coming year and will be succeeded by new Rapporteurs. The co-chairmanships would last from one Meeting of the States Parties to the next. The SCEs could meet on, at least, an annual basis.

Whilst the Co-chairs of the SCEs may wish to host such intersessional work in their capitals (or elsewhere), it is suggested that meetings of the SCEs normally take place in Geneva. It would therefore be useful to consider the role of the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining (GICHD) in offering practical support to such intersessional activities, for example, by providing the necessary organization and venue. The meetings of the SCEs would, in this way, imply no additional costs beyond the costs of attendance.

STATEMENT BY HIS EXCELLENCY
MR. JOAQUIM ALBERTO CHISSANO,
PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF MOZAMBIQUE,
AT THE OPENING CEREMONY OF THE FIRST MEETING

Maputo, 3 May 1999

Allow me, at the outset, to express my warmest greetings to the distinguished participants in the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, which opens here today in the capital city of the Republic of Mozambique.

It is a matter of great pride and joy for us to host this important gathering in our motherland. The choice of Mozambique bears testimony to our country's commitment to fulfil the goals of the Convention – a commitment dating back to the process that culminated in the signing of the Convention in Ottawa.

The Friends of Maputo did not spare any effort to ensure that all would be done for the success of this Meeting. Let me seize this opportunity to express our deep appreciation to those countries that, alongside Mozambique, made the necessary arrangements for the holding of this Meeting.

This Meeting is of paramount symbolic importance, being held, as it is, so soon after the entry into force of the Convention, on 1 March -- a fact that reflects the unflinching determination of the States Parties to carry on their struggle against anti-personnel landmines.

This Meeting is also a historical landmark for mankind, as it is an unequivocal turn towards the eradication of anti-personnel landmines. In this regard, I wish to voice our gratitude to those who strove to make this idea a dream come true and to advocate the implementation of the Convention, as soon as possible, through concrete and tangible actions.

I thus wish Your Excellencies a good and enjoyable stay in our country, and I hope you will feel at home so that your work may be crowned with success.

Today we are on the threshold of a new millennium, but mankind is still bedevilled by daunting problems, among them the proliferation of anti-personnel landmines and their devastating effects on societies. In countries like Mozambique, Angola, Cambodia, Afghanistan Bosnia-Herzegovina and Nicaragua, to mention just a few, anti-personnel landmines continue to claim thousands of innocent lives, crippling and causing other nefarious effects. This state of affairs poses, for all States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and society at large, a great challenge which merits thorough analysis and the adoption of appropriate measures aiming at the eradication of landmines.

The anti-personnel landmines problem is emerging as a priority issue on the international political agenda requiring, above all else, political will and concerted efforts from all our peoples and countries. Lasting solutions can be found for this persistent evil, which unfortunately continues to afflict many countries, even those which, until recently, were thought to be unaffected by these deadly devices.

This collective effort has already resulted in a strengthening of the partnership among many concerned actors, a partnership that we are witnessing and celebrating here in Maputo. The heterogeneity of the States Parties to this Convention makes this partnership a useful example of international cooperation among nations.

In this partnership that we have built, it is important to highlight the leading role of the International Campaign to Ban Landmines, whose work has been widely recognized by the awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize and which is being emulated.

We highly commend the growing interest in this Convention and in the struggle against landmines, in particular at the international level. It is gratifying to learn that what until quite recently seemed a dream for a few countries and organizations has become a worldwide project. This interest shows the potential vitality of the Convention as a tool for cooperation in the struggle against landmines. It is incumbent upon us to turn such an interest into a driving force behind the struggle against landmines, in order to ensure peace, security and prosperity of mankind.

This is Mozambique's vision regarding the Convention, the legal instrument that today is gathering hundreds of representatives from all over the world, united by a common objective: to find ways and means of rendering the Convention universal and thereby ensure its systematic and effective implementation. It was for that reason that Mozambique took part in the codification of this Convention and was also one of the first States to ratify it.

Hence, I am confident that the Maputo Meeting is an unparalleled opportunity for us to chart common strategies aimed at ensuring a better future for our peoples and countries. It is my hope that the international consensus on the common struggle against landmines, expressed by the holding of this conference, will be strengthened, especially if we bear in mind the fact that we are meeting in Mozambique and in a continent that suffered and continues to suffer from the consequences of these indiscriminately lethal weapons.

The fact that this Meeting is convened during our seventh consecutive year of peace and stability is particularly gratifying for us Mozambicans. These seven years have afforded Mozambicans the opportunity to draw their conclusions about the effects of landmines.

The peace and stability that rallied the Mozambican people has made possible the continuous exercise of national reconciliation and reconstruction. As a result, we have come to realize that peace and stability are paramount elements of economic and social development, and provide firm ground for the consolidation of democracy.

Within the framework of the consolidation of our young multi-party democracy, the country is already getting ready for its second general elections, scheduled for the end of this year. The Government of Mozambique has approved the whole legal framework that will guide the electoral process. The people will once more be called upon to elect their representatives who, over the next five years, will discharge the daunting but lofty mission of consolidating democracy more and more and ensuring the country's sustainable development and thereby its integration into the inevitable globalization process .

Along with the consolidation of the democratic process, the country is yielding satisfactory and encouraging rates of economic growth, as reflected in the growth of the GDP, control of inflation, stability of the national currency, increase in foreign investment and gradual improvement in the living conditions of the people. We are aware that the economic growth is not yet reflected in a satisfactory increase in purchasing power and effective economic stability for Mozambican citizens. Landmines are one of the principal factors obstructing improvement in the living standards of our people.

In view of the three generations of landmines implanted in our territory, compounded by inaccurate mapping of most of them, my people live in uncertainty and permanent fear, which prevent them from effectively using vast areas of arable land. Surveys indicate that there are about 2 million landmines in Mozambique, while demining and destruction currently take place at the pace of only 11 thousand landmines per year; thus it will require approximately 160 years to clear all of them!

By virtue of its ratification, the Republic of Mozambique undertook to identify, report, demine and destroy all existing landmines in the country within the parameters set out in the Convention: four years for doing away with the stockpiles of landmines in our countries and ten years for completing the demining process. These targets cannot be negotiated for all the members of the Convention. What is negotiable, though, is the ways and means for their implementation. As a State Party to the Convention, we look forward to greater commitment on the part of your countries than that displayed up until today. My Government will do its utmost so that, ten years from now, in the year 2009, we may celebrate the eradication of landmines from the face of the earth.

Over the next years, concerted efforts will be necessary for us to win the long and protracted battle of building the national capacity of affected countries and developing new technologies for the demining process.

I would be remiss if I failed to use this opportunity to make special mention of the importance of providing assistance to the victims of landmines. The landmines issue is above all a humanitarian one, and is intertwined with the evil that befalls landmine victims.

Assistance to victims is, indeed, one of the major concerns of the international community. In Mozambique, thousands of our fellow citizens who have been mutilated by these devices are waiting for the day when we shall have the conditions required for increasing assistance and effecting the social and economic reintegration to which they are entitled. It is within this framework that my Government, in close cooperation with friendly countries, drew up a national assistance strategy for landmines victims. As the document will be presented in the next few days, you will have the opportunity to undertake a detailed assessment of this multidisciplinary programme we have worked out. In fact, I hope to see this strategy encompass health, job promotion and social reintegration activities, for without these we cannot talk about adequate assistance to landmine victims.

Implementation of the provisions of the Convention will require the mobilization of national, regional and international efforts and resources.

The landmine problem is an overriding issue in the political agenda of Southern Africa. At the Blantyre Summit of Heads of State and Government, the Southern Africa Development Community (SADC) adopted a declaration, which, inter alia, calls on member States to adopt national policies on the prohibition of anti-personnel landmines, on accession to the Ottawa Convention and on the allocation of resources for demining activities in the countries affected in the region.

Still on the regional scene, SADC set up a Demining Committee for the coordination of actions against landmines, and its chairmanship was entrusted to the Republic of Mozambique. This sub-regional effort must be shared by the rest of the continent and must also be supported by all on-going initiatives.

These actions must be complemented and strengthened by the work of the United Nations and a host of Governments and non-governmental organizations involved in this noble mission. Let us share experiences in order to meet the goals we have set for ourselves.

Our success shall, in the future, be judged in terms of fewer and fewer victims and the level of assistance we provide them, and also in terms of the extension of arable land and the degree of normalization of life in affected communities. For that reason, we are meeting in Maputo to reaffirm our commitment to eradicate one of the most inhumane weapons of war and terror -- the anti-personnel landmine -- so that in a not-too-distant future we can focus our attention on the search for solutions to problems on which no international consensus has yet been built.

At this point in time, when we are celebrating the entry into force of the Convention, we take note of the fact that the success of this international instrument depends mainly on the fulfillment of the obligations set out therein: demining, destruction of stockpiles, prohibition of the use and transfer of landmines, assistance and rehabilitation of victims, and the strengthening of international cooperation and assistance. These should be the common objectives of the whole international community. Thus, we call on all countries that have not acceded to, or ratified the Convention to do so as soon as possible. We call upon the international community at large, and civil society in particular, to redouble their efforts to render the Convention universal. A special call is addressed to the media to disseminate this message to all corners of the world.

Let us make this Maputo Meeting the foundation for ensuring the eradication of anti-personnel landmines and the reduction of the human crisis caused by them. To this end, we call on Governments, international organizations and civil society to reaffirm their desire to act and mobilize resources to alleviate human suffering.

When we were negotiating the Convention, we were aware of the mutual benefits deriving therefrom. We are happy that this objective is not only advocated by States Parties, but also by the international community as a whole. The Convention, per se, provides an unparalleled opportunity for States Parties to exchange experiences and expertise in order to address the aspirations of their respective populations, and to forge partnerships with all stakeholders. I wish therefore to reiterate our appeal for the adoption of necessary measures for the full implementation of this new instrument of international law and for it to be a source of inspiration and a benchmark for coming generations.

There is an African adage that states: "We borrowed this land from our children and we must return it to them in good condition". As we deal with the landmine issue and its destructive power, let us bear this adage in mind, let us reflect thoroughly on the pressing need to eliminate the scourge of landmines. We must leave Maputo ever more determined to build an alliance among States and civil society, and thus pool our talents in this great battle against landmines.

When the history of the Convention is written, it will be recorded that Oslo was the city where this initiative flourished and Ottawa was the city where it came to fruition when the Convention was opened for signature. Let us make Maputo, the capital city of one of the most mine-affected countries in the world, the place where the First Meeting of the States Parties laid the foundations for a world free from landmines.

In closing, I pray that the proceedings of this Meeting will lead to greater cooperation among nations.

For a world free from landmines, I solemnly declare open the proceedings of the First Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction.

I thank you very much.
